As an expert in cyber security, Paul speaks at events across the US and England advocating for stronger cyber security in small and mid-sized businesses considering they are the most vulnerable facet of the economy. He is also a proponent for cyber-risk management and oversight in the corporate boardroom.

Paul was an executive director of McGregor & Associates, Inc. In this capacity he served as cyber security and strategic IT expert on the board. Responsible for HIPAA compliance of over 3 million health care records, he managed security incidents as well as providing a full range of strategy, operations, change management, and information technology solutions to the Healthcare industry. His board service culminated with the sale of the company and exceptional value realization to the shareholders.

After his work on the sale, Paul co-Founded Secure7X, a cyber security and IT consulting firm which currently enjoys growing market capitalization in the SaaS and consulting space. Paul sold his ownership stake in 2018 to focus on speaking, security consulting, and board leadership.

Paul is an accomplished information security leader with a track record of integration of operations and information technology. As a member of the strategic planning team at Kryptos Logic, globally known for finding the “kill-switch” for the WannaCry ransomware and a high-end cyber security firm, he helped develop web-based, B2B product offerings focused on delivering cutting edge security analysis and standards-based reporting.

As Director of International Business Development at Worldcom, Paul managed the operational start-up of five international joint ventures, where he managed budgets ranging from $5M to $440M. In this role he lived in Japan, England, and Canada. He managed network deployments into England, Spain, and Germany from London.
